

National Center for Faculty and Leadership Development

Vision

The National Center for Faculty and Leadership Development is an outstanding and prominent center performing at international standards and recognized locally, regionally, and internationally in the fields of human resource development , specially, education, use of technology, producing and publishing training knowledge, leadership and management. The center would have certified branches in the Egyptian universities.

Mission

The National Center for Faculty and Leadership Development offers a opportunities for professional development for faculty and leadership in the Egypt, and the region. It also prepares and internationally certifies professional trainers . The center develops training materials with international standards. It also provides special programs for technological and scientific researchers. The center develops competences of leadership in the fields of business and public service.

Areas of training

- Training Of Trainers. TOT
- Teaching.
- Scientific Research.
- Leadership and Management.
- Communication and Ethics.

There are a number of training subjects in each field.

The issues of the centers

- Trainers Manual (qualification and certification)
- Training Materials Manual (preparation and certification)
- Training Centers Manual (preparation and certification)
- New letter about the Center
- Training special papers.

National Center for Faculty and Leadership Development (NCFLD)

Faculty and Leadership Development Project (FLDP)

Add to your qualification

And get a certification of International Certified Trainer

For more information please contact:

National Center for Faculty and Leadership Development
96, Ahmed Oraby st. 11th floor ,El Mohandseen ,Giza.

Tel. / 33458610 ext. 117 ñ 118, fax: 33458611

www.ncfld.org

e-mail: fldp_info@yahoo.com

(A regional certified center for the International Board of Certified Trainers)

Director: professor. Samir Reyad Helal

About FLDP

- The Faculty and Leadership Development Project (FLDP) started as one of the six projects included in the larger Higher Education Enhancement Project (HEEP) in Egypt in 2003
- The project helped the Egyptian governmental universities to establish their own training centers. It trained and prepared the first group of trainers, prepared training materials, and designed and implemented training workshops and seminars for staff members - About 120,000 trainees have participated in all programs till December 2006.
- By the beginning of 2007, training has become an acceptable culture and practice in Egyptian universities. It was then about time to concentrate on quality standards in the training and development process in order to attract more trainees. Assuring quality would help recognition and accreditation of such programs from local and global organizations.
- A plan was set to convert the national project to a national center to prepare and certify the trainers according to some recognized international standards. In addition international standards were used to develop training materials in a style and format used in international training organizations. It was also planned that the national center helps and supports the centers in the universities to perform at the international standards.

Main principles of Faculty and Leadership Development

- Human elements are the core in any activity, improvement or progress, therefore, enhancing university education won't be achieved without improving human resources.

- Man keeps learning for all his life and his experience is accumulated with every new education and training endeavor.
- University professors are responsible for their scientific and professional development. While, the former is done by the scientific department, the latter needs a professional program through a professional organization.
- The rapid development changes in technology, media and communications requires faculty members and leaders to gain competences that can deal with it.
- Leadership, management and communication require certain skills that cannot be attained through reading a book.

Goals of Faculty and Leadership Development

- To develop competences of staff members to deal with modern technology which enhances their practice in teaching.
- To improve the abilities of staff members in communicating with students, colleagues and management in a way that helps to create a better atmosphere in their universities.
- To develop the competences of staff members in the professional issues that are related to learning and research operation.
- To develop managerial and decision making skills of those who want to hold managerial positions.

For whom are the activities of the projects directed?

Egyptian universities in the first phase, including:

- Staff members .
- Demonstrators and Teaching assistants.
- Academic leaders and managers.
- Administrative and technical staff..

Community at large in the second phase which includes:

- Technicians within the laboratories, factories and workshops.
- Administrative staff in all institutions.
- Leaders and potential key management positions in public, private, and civil service organizations.

Where does the training take place?

1. Central Training:
The training takes place in the National Center for Faculty and Leadership Development (The Ministry of Higher Education in Cairo) for the following workshops:
 - Qualifying and certifying the trainers "train the trainers" (TOT).
 - Management and leadership Specially tailored programs.
2. Training at the Egyptian Universities:
Training also is held at FLDP training centers within the universities for the other workshops that are related to the other competencies of their staff members.